The meal programme has been designed by a qualified nutritionist and offers a wide variety of balanced meal options to accommodate different tastes, including a daily vegetarian option, while also considering food allergies and intolerances. 6. Supporting Pupil Well-being: Services Provided by Our School Psychologist

INTRODUCTION

The service aims to apply the principles of psychology to the field of education, contributing to the positive adaptation of individuals, but also of school systems, despite the challenges that they may face.

The main concern of the Service is to strengthen the adaptability and functionality of all children at school. The Counselling and Guidance Service is provided to all pupils, parents, and teachers. The services are provided either in the form of individual treatment of children who are facing challenges in school adaptation, or in the form of wider preventive interventions, workshops, and programmes, for the entire school population.

The Counselling Psychology and Guidance Service places a strong emphasis on offering services to every pupil and staff member as it holds the belief that mental health is an integral aspect of public health.

MISSION STATEMENT

The mission of the Counselling Psychology and Guidance Service is the promotion of mental health and the facilitation of learning and all-round development of each person who participates in our educational system.

Through the application of psychological principles to educational practice, the service aims to contribute significantly towards the strengthening and improvement of the school community, the acceptance and appreciation of diversity, and the scholastic success of all pupils.

This means that the Counselling and Guidance Service, in collaboration with the school, aims, beyond the education and socialization of pupils, to promote other important protective factors for the child, such as a positive school climate, quality communication between the members of the school community, as well as the positive reinforcement of various individual factors, capabilities and skills in children.

In her daily practice, the School Psychologist will provide services to pupils, parents, and teachers. Services provided may be either in the form of individualised help to children who present emotional, psychosocial, or behavioural difficulties or in the form of more generalised preventive interventions and programmes to scientifically assist teachers and parents in handling problems related to the school environment or at home.

PROCEDURES FOR OBTAINING COUNSELLING SERVICES AND GUIDANCE

Within the framework of the Mechanism for Psychological Support of Children and Young People, and Parental Counselling, within the School Environment, procedures were designed that must be followed in order to start receiving counselling services and guidance.

The services are provided on the basis of scheduled appointments set only during the school's operating hours, after contacting the School Office or the School Psychologist, Ms. Irene Pavlou, by sending an email to pavloui@pascal.ac.cy.

Within this field of Counselling Psychology Service of Pascal Education, the following services are provided:

- Parental counselling on matters related to children's education or on specific problems they may face
- Counselling for children and young people.

The above services are provided by the School Psychologist.

CODE OF CONDUCT – PROTECTION OF RIGHTS

1. General

The professional activities of the School Psychologist are regulated by the Head of the School, and by the laws of the state, the directions/circulars of the Attorney-General's Office, the Schemes of Service, and the Professional Code of Conduct. This is a collection of rules based upon ethical and professional values and principles that is composed by the appropriate professional bodies in each country. In Cyprus, the Code of Conduct of the Cyprus Psychologists Association is in effect, as is the Meta-Code of Ethics of the European Federation of Psychologists/Associations (EFPA). The Code of Conduct guides Psychologists in making the appropriate or ethically desirable choices in conducting their professional activities. It also provides ethical criteria by which their conduct may be judged by others. The basic principle expected to guide all their actions is respect for and protection of human dignity and the rights of people (their clients) with whom they are involved professionally. The application of this principle is ensured through the practices described below.

2. The right to be informed about the availability of psychological services and the right to access them

Every person within the school system – every pupil, parent, and teacher – has the right to be informed of the availability of Counselling and Guidance Services in school and to have direct access to them.

3.1 Pupils

Pupils have the right to seek psychological help. In any case, the pupil must be informed, in a manner appropriate to his/her age and ability to understand, about the identity of the School Psychologist, the basic aspects of the professional relationship, as well as the nature and duration of the psychological services to be provided. The pupil is informed about the reasons for the referral, the persons or agencies with which information will be shared, for what purpose and under what circumstances. Efforts must be made to secure the pupil's cooperation while at the same time, it must be made clear that the pupil has the right to accept or to refuse/terminate the provision of psychological services.

3.2 Parents/Guardians

Parents/Guardians who apply to the Counselling and Guidance Service for assistance in addressing their children's problems must be informed by the School Psychologist about the need for their child's consent (depending on age and ability to understand) and voluntary cooperation. Parents/Guardians are also informed that, if help is being sought for problems related to learning and/or adjustment, then the School Psychologist might deem it appropriate to seek the cooperation of the school community for intervention purposes as to enhance the child's wellbeing in the school environment.

In cases of referrals made by third parties (for example the school or other agencies or persons) it is imperative – except in life-threatening or similar circumstances – that parental / guardian consent is secured before any sort of psychological intervention is made.

It is to be noted that according to Law 113(I)/1999 on the Education and Training of Children with Special Needs, the appropriate District Committees for Special Education and Training "have the duty to adequately assess each child deemed as presenting with special needs" and so may refer children to the Educational Psychologists for assessment without prior consent of their parents / guardians.

Even in such cases, the School Psychologist considers it her obligation to contact parents / guardians before embarking on any procedure with their child, to involve them and to keep them informed about all intervention procedures and their progress, within the bounds set by confidentiality principles.

4. Right to Privacy and Confidentiality

Confidentiality is ensured by the Code of Practice and applies to the protection of personal data, record keeping and to the use and sharing of information. According to Article 25 of the Code of Ethics, "professional confidentiality covers all that the School Psychologist has seen or heard or has come to understand about persons and their private lives during the School Psychologist's professional practice."

In each case, every effort is made to ensure that personal privacy and confidentiality are upheld and that the sharing of information is done only for specific, clear pre-specified purposes with the prior informed consent of the person concerned (pupil, parent/guardian).

The School Psychologist maintains confidentiality concerning all information gathered during the professional relationship with their clients. The information is disclosed only after the information and consent of the pupil or – depending on his/her age – his/her parent or guardian.

Privileged information may only be released when the School Psychologist forms the opinion that the life or physical integrity of his/her client or other persons is under threat or when domestic violence is suspected. Information is disclosed only to appropriate agencies. The School Psychologist must always inform pupils and parents about the limits of professional confidentiality at the very beginning of their professional relationship.

5. Personal data filing system

The School Directorate keeps a filing system with individual files containing the personal data of pupils who have been referred to the Counselling and Guidance Service. The Commissioner for the Protection of Data has been notified about the operation of this filing system in compliance with the relevant law on The Processing of Personal Data (Protection of Individuals) Law 138 (I) 2001.

The Service is bound by a legal and ethical obligation to take measures to preserve and protect personal data contained in its filing system. Access to the system is granted only to duly authorised persons. The School Psychologist has an obligation to inform pupils and parents about the process of keeping records and drawing up reports which include information concerning their person.

6. Transfer of data and information to third parties

The School Psychologist ensures that information concerning pupils and parents is only transferred to duly authorised persons or agencies. Information is usually shared with the District Committees of Special Education, sometimes with Department Heads within the Ministry of Education and Sport and Youth, the Head Teachers, the Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services, the Department of Social Welfare Services, and other professionals (doctors, psychiatrists, psychologists). Prior informed consent of the clients is required.
